The Oakland Baptist Church

Several residents of "The Fort" community were founders of the Oakland Baptist Church, which is located at the intersection of King Street and Braddock Road. The congregation started worshipping in a bush arbor as Oak Hill Baptist Mission in 1858 and moved to 3408 King Street in 1893. Despite the hardships associated with the community's relocation and the development of Fort Ward into a historical park, the Oakland Baptist Church and Cemetery survive and stand as symbols of the self-sufficiency, integrity, and longevity of this distinctive African American community.

Supernatural Deacon Arnes Foster (left) was pastor and teacher. Deacon Morris Johnson (left) was second from right and Elizabeth Dancy (right) stood with a son (OBC Oakland Baptist Church Sunday School class). The church moved to a house of worship and a social gathering place. Special programs such as "Blessings" and "Prayer and Friends Day" reached other churches. There were gospel concerts and "The Church Revivalists" to which children attended. There were health and games. The Sunday School sponsored annual convalescence to Spawton Beach and Snow Island, followed by some work at the Northern Virginia Baptist Center in Silverdale, Virginia.

After a fire destroyed the original structure in 1921, Rev. Richard Barnes became the cornerstone of a new, one-story church. In this 1928 photograph, Rev. Barnes (left) and chairman of the Finance Board, Rev. Samuel J. Moore (right), stand before the church's second-floor sanctuary. Construction members completed the project the next year. Rev. Barnes served as pastor of Oakland Baptist Church for 20 years.

The work of "the founders" made evident the church members' sense of community, determination, and self-sufficiency.

The Oakland Baptist Church on King Street, pictured after its 1928 construction, continues to serve the African American community. It represents the strength and durability of early church founders and descendants families, many of whom still live in the area. The church is listed in "The Black Book, African Church, and Home by the Spirit's Power."

Testimony for Alexandria City Council Public Hearing on Ft. Ward Management Plan
(Jan. 24, 2015)

Good Morning; thank you for this opportunity and for taking the time on this matter. I am Adrienne Terrell Washington, director of the Ft. Ward and Seminary African American Descendants Society (FWSAADS), and I will be giving an overview of our concerns that will be addressed individually by the speakers that follow. I speak on behalf of those descendants, some of whom you see today, who are the offspring a religious people who created a self-sufficient community that prospered for more than one hundred years on acres of land that was confiscated by developers and the City of Alexandria for what is now known as the historic Ft. Ward Park. Some of these Ft. Ward descendants were relocated down the hill to the Seminary Community where land was also confiscated for TC Williams High School which bears the same address as my grandparents' home at 3330 King Street. We still live there today in a community which continues to face the threat of encroaching development issues -- the latest involving the implementation of lights on the school property which our forbearers were promised would never be erected.

To some, Ft. Ward is a place to stroll, or picnic, or walk a dog; or recollect Civil War battles; but to us, Ft. Ward is a place where Aunt Clara nursed Sunday School children; were Grandma Jesse tended her geranium garden; were Uncle Johnny tended his pigs, were the women, including Jennie Wanzer Ashby, brought out their fine china to host tea parties. To us, Ft. Ward is where we go to honor our dead at their known and unknown gravesites, where George Craven noted, "we were poor, so we buried our people in the yard."

To us, the vast majority of Ft. Ward is sacred; it is has been, is, and will be "hallowed ground." That is why it has been so important to us, to make sure that you, this 21st Century Alexandria City Council, get it right this time to ensure that our ancestors' graves, memories and contributions to this special spot, now a public park, will be honored going forward as it has not been in the past. Surely, the park's history could be preserved, and enjoyed by park lovers, just like one of the "Hallowed Ground" projects of the National Park Service. Ours is a prime example of the civil war to civil rights story well-suited to the African American Heritage Trail enhancing Alexandria's tourist attractions.

However, what you have before you as the voluminous Ft. Ward Management Plan, which was voted on by the Ft. Ward Stakeholders Group, of which we were 3 members, albeit often disregarded and disrespected members, does not adequately address the three major concerns we had going into the project and still have several years later: finding graves, eliminating storm water runoff, and generating an accurate historic preservation plan. This is why we voted against this staff-driven plan being forwarded to this body. The flawed documentation and technological "concepts" on which the management plan is based, particularly the fundamental ground penetrating map, led to a laundry list of recommendations (which staff continue to change). We feel that there must be more strongly worded language in the plan, particularly with the ground disturbance memorandum, that will protect the African American graves, cemeteries and other historic physical structures in the park, with adequate and direct consultation and notification to the descendants going forward, as we stated in our attached "Minority Report." As staff unknowingly responded to our minority report, we may still offer a separate clarification to correct the inaccurate statements it contains.

Due to these continuing problems mentioned, we are now asking that you do not act on the Ft. Ward management plan as currently written until we can develop a more trustworthy and collaborative path going forward to remedy our concerns, or to go forward with stringent conditions, including a committee, headed by a council member, which will more equitably address our concerns before the staff is allowed to implement the management plan without additional council and community input and oversight.

Our priorities are still about the undirected storm water flow that continues to erode the graves in the OBC cemetery and adjacent graveyard; locating as many unmarked graves as possible and honoring those with a memorial; and further researching and preserving the African American experience and physical structures built by our ancestors with a visible interpretive plan in the Ft. Ward Museum and in the park.

Given the political climate of the late 1950s and early 1960s, many of our ancestors at Ft. Ward were misled and mistakes were made in taking their land that we, today, would have been working hard to avoid repeating today. That is why the representatives of the descendants society, the Seminary Civic Association and the Oakland Baptist Church have been volunteering countless hours to collaborate in good faith with city staff and other stakeholders to come up with a better management plan for Ft. Ward that would honor the historic mission of the park at the same time provide for passive recreation in the park that would maintain its serene nature given that our ancestors are still buried in this "hallowed ground."

CIVIL WAR TO CIVIL RIGHTS

African Americans established “The Fort,” a community that continued here for nearly a century after the Civil War (1861-1865) into the Civil Rights Era of the 1960s. The place received its name from The Fort’s location on and around the remnants of Fort Ward, one of the fortifications that were built as part of the Defenses of Washington. In the late 19th and first half of the 20th centuries, families living at The Fort and in the larger “Seminary” community—located around the Virginia Theological Seminary and Episcopal High School on Braddock, Howard, King and Quaker streets—were connected through shared kinship, marriage, church, and work, particularly at the two Episcopal educational institutions. Four generations of families (including the Adams, Ashby, Craven, Casey, Henry, Hall, Jackson, Javins, Johnson, Lewis, McKnight, Miller, Peters, Randall, Roy, Shorts, Simms, Terrell, Wans(z)er, Wood and Young families) sustained The Fort through these associations, faith, adherence to a strict moral code, and emphasis on education.

AFRICAN AMERICANS AND THE CIVIL WAR

The Civil War opened the door for opportunity and civil rights for African American Virginians, about 90 percent of whom were enslaved in 1860. The upheaval from battles and the federal presence in Alexandria and eastern Fairfax County offered the means and destination for thousands to escape slavery, seek refuge and jobs behind Union lines, and create new lives. These “contrabands” and freed people aided the Union cause by working as hospital attendants, gravediggers, stevedores, teamsters, cooks, laundresses, and in labor gangs to build roads, construct fortifications and trenches, and maintain rail lines. More than 200,000 men enlisted in the United States Colored Troops (USCT). Many African American soldiers escaped slavery before enlistment, such as the fathers of two long-time residents at “The Fort” and “Seminary” community.

Employment—Continuity and Self-sufficiency

Before the Civil War, enslaved African Americans worked as domestics and laborers at the Virginia Theological Seminary and Episcopal High School. Change occurred in June 1861 when Union troops occupied the closed schools and established a military hospital. The Fairfax Seminary Hospital provided employment and support for some freed people. After the war, African Americans settled in the areas surrounding the Episcopal complex, where they worked as carpenters, cooks, waiters, drivers and maintenance staff. By the end of the 19th century, many of these families had bought land and established their homes in “The Fort” and “Seminary” community. Some families retained their connection to these educational institutions for nearly a century.

AN ENDURING AFRICAN AMERICAN COMMUNITY

“The Fort” community began in large part from the results of the Civil War—freedom, rights, and opportunities for enslaved African Americans. Ironically, The Fort ended almost a century later as civil rights expanded. The City of Alexandria dedicated this park and museum for the Civil War Centennial in 1964. People were displaced, buildings demolished, graves lost as the African American presence faded from view.

Yet, The Fort endures. The remains of its homes and school/chapel, fragments of household items, and numerous graves survive underground. The Fort’s descendants retain memories, images and traditions. New generations of those who founded The Fort and larger “Seminary” community still live nearby. The Oakland Baptist Church stands on King Street as a landmark to the community’s founders and members. Its cemetery is bordered by Fort Ward Park. The Virginia Theological Seminary and Episcopal High School are witnesses to African American craftsmanship, care, and service of those who once worked there.

Upon the 150th anniversary of the Civil War, the City of Alexandria honors The Fort’s enduring African American legacy.

JACKSON CEMETERY

In 1884, James F. Jackson purchased the largest of “The Fort” parcels with 11.5 acres and the “western slope of a bank of Fort Ward.” Over 40 years, James farmed and was a driver at the Episcopal High School, and his wife Katie was a laundress. The Jacksons established a burial ground on the fort’s slope (glacis). “Uncle Jim” dug graves with “Uncle Fred” Rust and “Uncle Simon” Reed. In 1926, investors intending to build Eagle Crest development purchased most of the land, and the City of Alexandria acquired it 30 years later for the park. Only a few names of those buried are known, and none of the grave markers survived. Elizabeth Henry Douglas, whose two brothers’ graves are here, remembers that the disappearance of the markers “made our hearts sad, and we never did know what happened to them.” Archaeological investigations identified grave locations for positioning new markers.

Descendant Voices— “Were Still Here.”

“Through sheer strength of will, determination, fortitude, guts, and against all odds, our ancestors fashioned a life here at Fort Ward, an abandoned Union fort. Then, out of necessity, they developed an entire viable, self-sustaining community that is still very much in existence today. It’s undergone many changes, but we’re still here.

In the 1950s and 1960s, the City moved the residents out of Fort Ward to establish the Park and Museum, which disrupted their tranquility. In 1962, the City displaced our community once again to build T.C. Williams High School. But, we’re still here. ”

Frances (Johnson) Colbert Terrell, great-great-granddaughter of Seminary community founders, Wallace and Virginia Roy Wans(z)er

“The African American Descendants of The Fort and Seminary communities have only one dutiful and determined goal, the restoration and preservation of our sacred heritage. Where others view deeds, cannons, and picnic pavilions, we see people buried on this hallowed ground whose blood runs through our veins and four generations of our families’ veins.

Countless unmarked graves of our ancestors are buried under the very soil that joggers, dog walkers and Civil War buffs unknowingly tread today. Where others see “open space,” we see familiar faces, family memories and challenges on land that our ancestors—from slavery to freedom to Jim Crow to urban renewal—toiled, bought and successively seeded to grow a sustainable community through self-sufficiency, small farms, churches, schools and community values that have contributed to the prosperity of this city and nation for 150 years.

What does Fort Ward mean to us? It means blood, land and life. It models faith and morality. It conveys endurance and excellence. It speaks of our struggle but trumpets our survival. ”

Adrienne Terrell Washington, great-great-granddaughter of “The Fort” founder, Harriett Stuart McKnight Shorts

In 1939, the Oakland Baptist Church acquired a lot from Samuel Javins after the death of his wife, Florence McKnight Javins. She inherited the property from her mother, Harriett Stuart McKnight Shorts, one of the founders of the church. Family ownership of the land started in 1879, when Burr Shorts, Harriett's husband, began purchasing 10 acres. The Shorts-McKnight family was one of the principal founding families of "The Fort" and continued living here until the 1960s. Three McKnight family graves are the earliest known in the cemetery and pre-date church ownership of the land: James W. Terrell and Maria McKnight (1925); and Burney McKnight Terrell, wife of James and sister of Maria (1930).

“ I don't know how they made it. You didn't have a credit card back then, and you just dropped in and the people gave you a little share of molasses and a hoecake and what they called 'soft fish,' which was salt fish. ”

Dorothy Hall Smith as told to Adrienne Terrell Washington.

Clara Shorts Adams and Robert Adams conveyed a quarter-acre to the Falls Church School District of Fairfax County in 1898 for the purpose of educating African American children. The one-room “Colored School Building at Seminary” was the first public schoolhouse for African Americans living in this community. The school closed in 1925, yet School House Lane can still be discerned in the park’s landscape. The building became an African American Episcopal chapel, St. Cyprian’s, with students from the Virginia Theological Seminary leading services and teaching children. Its members joined Meade Memorial Episcopal Church when the chapel closed. Renovated for residential use, the Sgt. Thomas Lee Young family lived here from 1947 until the City of Alexandria’s purchase and demolition of the building in the 1960s. Sgt. Young remembers that his bedroom was located in the chapel’s pulpit, and the kitchen was in the “Amen Corner.”

Education—Initiative & Excellence

Few African Americans were educated in Virginia before the Civil War. While some individuals gained literacy, the almost 550,000 African American Virginians—about 90 percent of whom were enslaved—did not have access to education. Even after the war, when public education was established in Virginia, black schools were segregated with unequal funding, facilities, and supplies. African Americans continually took measures to secure education for their children by donating land, building schools and raising funds. The school that once stood at The Fort and its successor, the Seminary School, were such community initiatives. Douglass Wood donated the land and the community raised $1000 to ensure construction of the Seminary School, which was located where T.C. Williams High School now stands.
