

Her influence and guidance helped lead to the development of Alexandria's new Metroway bus service linking Alexandria and Arlington along Route 1 and the provision of flexible right-of-way along the new Woodrow Wilson Bridge to accommodate future high-capacity transportation solutions based on the emerging needs of the region.

The daughter of a railroad engineer, Mrs. Walker's legacy was strongly focused on rail transportation, and she was the President of Virginians for High Speed Rail and a former Board member of the Washington Metropolitan Area Transit Authority. Her efforts also led to the donation of Alexandria's Union Station, now listed on the National Register of Historic Places, to the City of Alexandria.

After Mrs. Walker's death in 2013, family members and friends sought a proper memorial in her honor that recognized her service and commitment to the Alexandria community. After considering several alternatives, the Naming Committee reviewed a proposal to install a plaque with the following inscription within the glassed-in arcade at the Alexandria Union Station:

"Lois Walker, 1913-2013, was a tireless advocate for multi-modal transportation solutions within the City of Alexandria and throughout the National Capital area. Through her efforts Alexandria's Union Station was donated to the City of Alexandria, a transportation commission was created, and high capacity transportation corridors were designated. Her devotion and advocacy for transportation has led to the implementation of high capacity Metroway bus service through Crystal City and Potomac Yard which is one step toward her dream of a modern regional streetcar system. Lois also played a key role in ensuring that the rebuilt Woodrow Wilson Bridge would be able to accommodate a high capacity public transportation solution in the future. Lois served as the President of Virginians for High Speed Rail, as a board member with the Washington Metropolitan Area Transit Authority and the Virginia Railway Express. Lois was an Alexandria resident for 45 years and a two-term member of City Council. Forever an Alexandria legend."

The City Council Naming Committee (Councilwoman Pepper, Mayor Euille and City Manager Representative Lance Mallamo) considered this request at its meeting on September 30, 2015. The committee voted unanimously to recommend its support of the proposal to install the above inscribed plaque at the Alexandria Union Station in honor of Lois Walker, and that the recommendation be presented to City Council at its December 8 Legislative meeting, set for public hearing and consideration on Saturday, December 12. The Committee recommended that Council approve the installation of the plaque within the glassed arcade at the Alexandria Union Station in honor of Lois Walker.

FISCAL IMPACT: None.
